Base Fee	$1,500 USD	Delivery Mode	Online / On-site Hybrid

Course Introduction

Effective disaster risk reduction (DRR) requires not only robust preparedness strategies but also sustainable financial planning that ensures resources are available when crises strike. Budgeting for Disaster Risk Reduction Training Course is designed to equip professionals, policymakers, humanitarian workers, and financial managers with the expertise to integrate disaster risk financing, resilience budgeting, and climate change adaptation into institutional and national frameworks. By leveraging global best practices, this course ensures participants gain practical skills in budget allocation, resource mobilization, financial risk management, and emergency response financing.

This training emphasizes the critical link between fiscal sustainability and disaster resilience, highlighting how public financial management, cost-benefit analysis, donor engagement, and strategic investment can transform communities' capacity to withstand hazards. With real-life case studies, interactive modules, and scenario-based learning, participants will develop actionable frameworks for integrating DRR budgeting into development plans, promoting accountability, and maximizing impact for vulnerable populations.
