Course Introduction

The extractive industries mining, oil, and gas remain among the most economically powerful yet socially sensitive sectors globally. While they drive industrial growth, energy security, and infrastructure development, they are also frequently associated with human rights violations, environmental degradation, land dispossession, labor exploitation, and community displacement. Human Rights in Extractive Industries Training Course is designed to equip professionals with the critical knowledge and practical tools needed to ensure ESG compliance, responsible mining, corporate accountability, due diligence, and sustainable development governance.

In today’s rapidly evolving global economy, stakeholders are increasingly held accountable through frameworks such as the UN Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights (UNGPs), ESG reporting standards, OECD Due Diligence Guidelines, climate justice frameworks, and Indigenous rights protections. This course provides a comprehensive understanding of how extractive operations intersect with human rights law, environmental justice, community engagement, gender equality, and corporate social responsibility (CSR). Participants will explore real-world case studies, regulatory frameworks, grievance mechanisms, and monitoring systems to ensure ethical resource governance and long-term sustainable impact in extractive regions.
